

POISONED GRACE

POISONED GRACE

The bag is inspired by the Angel's Trumpet flower, known for its elongated curved silhouette and trumpet-like blooming tip, symbolizing softness and natural elegance. The exterior features flowing curved lines and muted tones such as white, cream, and dusty pink to reflect delicacy and grace. In contrast, dark metallic hardware and subtle sharp details are incorporated to represent the hidden toxicity beneath its beauty. The overall design embodies a balance between softness and strength — refined, graceful, yet quietly powerful

Angel's Trumpet

Angel's Trumpet is a flowering plant in the Brugmansia genus, recognized for its large trumpet-shaped blooms that hang gracefully downward. The flowers are commonly found in white or cream tones, though shades of yellow and pink can also appear. It is widely cultivated as an ornamental plant due to its elegant appearance and fragrant scent, especially noticeable during the evening and nighttime.

Origin: South America (Colombia, Ecuador, and Peru)

Characteristics: Large downward-facing trumpet-shaped flowers ranging from soft blush pink to deep pink

Species: Commonly derived from Brugmansia versicolor (known for its elongated flowers), Brugmansia suaveolens (known for its fragrance), or hybrid varieties

Care: Thrives in full sun to partial shade, with moist and well-drained soil

Toxicity: Every part of the Angel's Trumpet plant contains highly toxic alkaloids such as scopolamine and hyoscyamine. These substances can be extremely dangerous and potentially life-threatening if ingested or handled carelessly.

MIA GOTH

Mia Goth possesses a delicate, innocent, and soft appearance, yet many of her roles carry a dark and mysterious presence. This duality reflects the essence of the Angel's Trumpet flower — beautiful yet poisonous. The flower symbolizes elegance, sweetness, and purity on the surface, while concealing a dangerous toxicity beneath. Similarly, it represents the charm of a woman who appears gentle and graceful externally, but holds mystery, intensity, and hidden power within.
