Research

Kites have a long history, dating back over 2500-3000 years. It is believed they originated in China, where scholars like Mozi and Lu Ban invented kites from bamboo around 770-400 BC. In the past, kites were used for military purposes, such as signaling, measuring distances, and espionage. Kites spread to Korea, Japan, India, and Southeast Asia. Then, in the 16th-18th centuries, they spread to Western countries and were further developed for both recreational use and scientific experimentation.

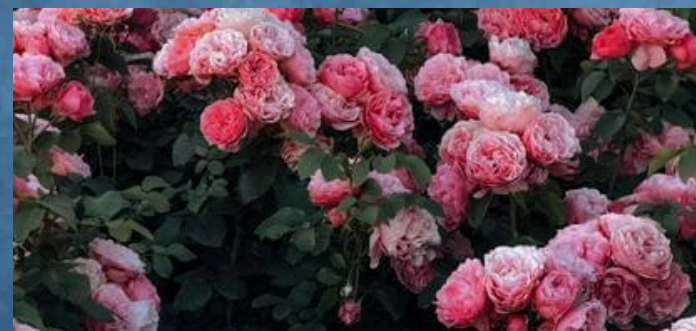

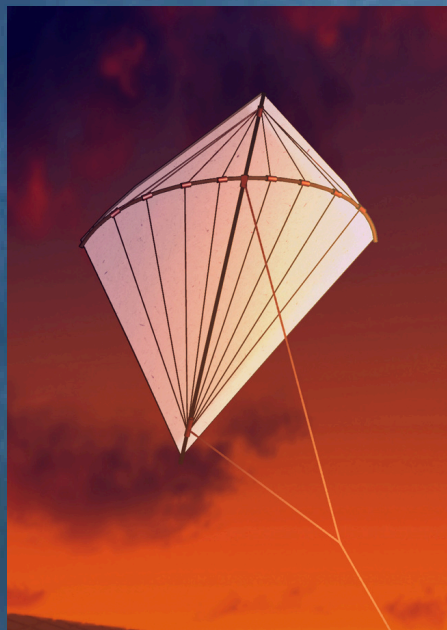

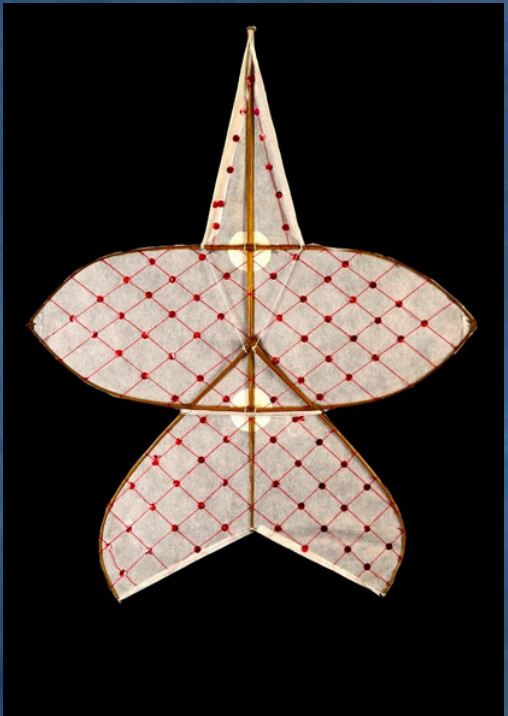

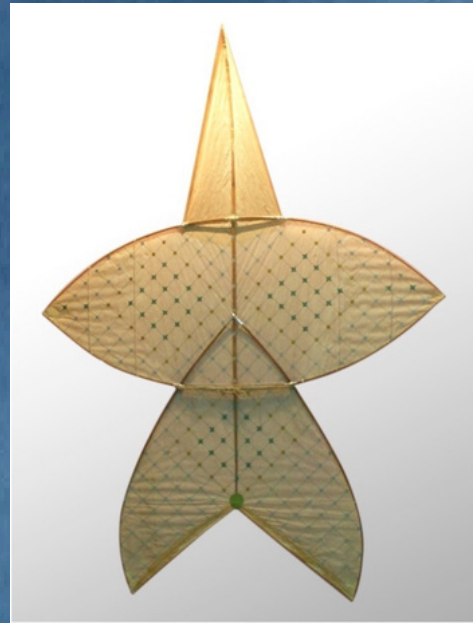

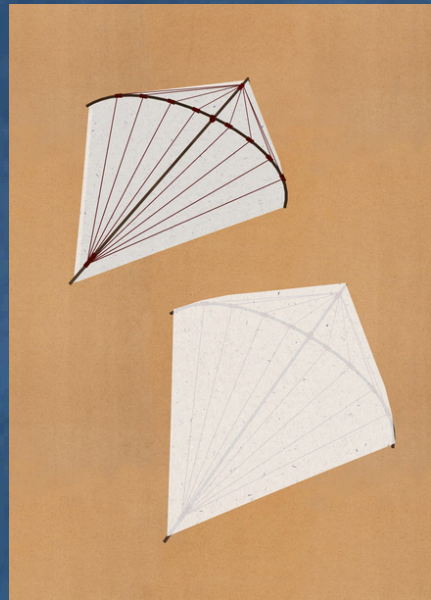

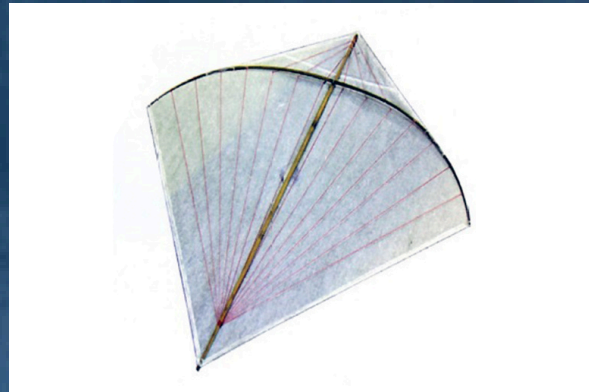

Thai kites have a long history of play, dating back over 700 years to the Sukhothai period. They reached their peak popularity during the Ayutthaya and Rattanakosin periods (reigns of King Rama IV-V), with traditional kite flying and competitions, especially for the Pak Pao and Chula kites, which are unique to Thailand and are often contested at Sanam Luang.
